The Institute of Public Health of the American College of Greece, established in September 2015, is fully funded by the Behrakis Foundation, in Boston, MA.

Directed by Professor Panagiotis Behrakis, the Institute's main purpose is the development of scientific research, as well as educational and other promotional activities, in order to increase public awareness in the field of public health.

In this context, the Institute organizes every year a series of lectures on various public health topics.

The lectures are addressed to health professionals, school teachers, scientists, as well as the general public, and especially parents interested in receiving up-to-date, scientifically proven information on crucial, current issues related to public health.

Aligned with the “George D. Behrakis Research Lab” of the Hellenic Cancer Society, the Institute of Public Health of the American College of Greece also supports the “Smoke Free Greece” campaign, as well as the smoking prevention and educational activities implemented nationally and internationally.

Lectures will be delivered in Greek.

Lectures are credited by the Pan-Hellenic Medical Association for continuing medical education (CME-CPD credits).
